NEW QUESTION: 4

The best technique to authenticate to a system is to:

- A. Establish biometric access through a secured server or Web site.
- B. Maintain correct and accurate ACLs (access control lists) to allow access to applications.
- C. Ensure the person is authenticated by something he knows and something he has.
- D. Allow access only through user ID and password.

Answer: C

Explanation:

Something you know and something you have is two authentication factors and is better than a single authentication factor. Strong Authentication or Two Factor Authentication is widely accepted as the best practice for authentication.

There are three type of authentication factors:

Type 1 - Something you know (password, pin)

Type 2 - Something you have (token, smart card, magnetic card)

Type 3 - Something you are (biometrics)

Whenever two of the three types of factors are used together, this is called strong authentication or two factors authentication

The following answers are incorrect:

Establish biometric access through a secured server or Web site:

This is a single factor authentication and it could be weaker than two factors, in most cases it is . Biometric devices can be tricked or circumvented in some cases, this is why they MUST be supplemented with a second factor of authentication. Multiple attacks have been done on different types of biometric devices. Two factors is always the best to authenticate a user.

Maintain correct and accurate ACLs (access control lists) to allow access to applications:

ACL are attached to objects. They are used within the access control matrix to define what level of access each of the subjects have on the object. It is a column within the Access Control matrix. This is related to authorization and not authentication.

Allow access only through user ID and password:

This is once again a single factor of authentication because both are something the person knows.
