NEW QUESTION: 2

A 35-year-old Latin-American client wishes to lose weight to reduce her chances of developing heart disease and diabetes. The client states, "I do not know how to make my diet work with the kind of foods that my family eats." What should the nurse do first to help the client determine a suitable diet for disease prevention?

A. Provide her with copies of the approved dietary guidelines for the American Diabetic Association and the American Heart Association.

B. Ask the client to provide a list of the types of foods she eats to determine how to best meet her needs.

C. Provide the client with information related to risk factors for heart disease and diabetes.

D. Provide a high-protein diet plan for the client.

Answer: B

Explanation:

Explanation/Reference:

Explanation:

Assessment is the first step. Assessing what the client eats helps the nurse determine a plan for dietary recommendations based on the ADA and AHA guidelines. Providing the client with a copy of the guidelines is important but is not the first priority. Based on the client's wish to reduce her chances of heart disease and diabetes, a high-protein diet plan might not be appropriate. Providing information to the client related to risk factors for heart disease and diabetes is important but is not the first step. Health Promotion and Management
