Which front panel LEDs on an Integrity rx2620 can indicate an error?

- A. Locator LED and System LED
- B. System LED and Diagnostic LEDs
- C. Diagnostic LEDs and Locator LED
- D. Power LED and Diagnostic LEDs

Answer: B

NEW QUESTION: 3

A network engineer wants to deploy user-based authentication across the company's wired and wireless infrastructure at layer 2 of the OSI model. Company policies require that users be centrally managed and authenticated and that each user's network access be controlled based on the user's role within the company. Additionally, the central authentication system must support hierarchical trust and the ability to natively authenticate mobile devices and workstations.

Which of the following are needed to implement these requirements? (Select TWO).

- A. LDAP
- B. WYAF

- C. RADIUS
- D. Shibboleth
- E. PKI
- F. SAML

Answer: A,C

Explanation:

RADIUS is commonly used for the authentication of WiFi connections. We can use LDAP and RADIUS for the authentication of users and devices. LDAP and RADIUS have something in common. They`re both mainly protocols (more than a database) which uses attributes to carry information back and forth. They`re clearly defined in RFC documents so you can expect products from different vendors to be able to function properly together.

RADIUS is NOT a database. It's a protocol for asking intelligent questions to a user database. LDAP is just a database. In recent offerings it contains a bit of intelligence (like Roles, Class of Service and so on) but it still is mainly just a rather stupid database. RADIUS (actually RADIUS servers like FreeRADIUS) provide the administrator the tools to not only perform user authentication but also to authorize users based on extremely complex checks and logic. For instance you can allow access on a specific NAS only if the user belongs to a certain category, is a member of a specific group and an outside script allows access. There's no way to perform any type of such complex decisions in a user database.
